

Animal Communicator

Do you know what your pet is thinking and feeling? Do you understand your pet's behaviors? Do you have any problem managing your pet? Animal communicators may understand and communicate with your furry companions by telepathy. They could connect with animals, and even convey messages mentally without speaking a word or making a face.

Some people believe that humans supposedly were born with the ability to communicate with each other telepathically and instinctively before languages and words were invented. Nowadays, humans can communicate through words and talk about our thoughts, emotions and feelings. Unfortunately, our pets cannot express themselves in words and tell us how they feel and what they think.

What should you do if you want to seek help from an animal communicator? You need to complete a form with some information of your pet and goals to achieve in the session. You also need to provide a picture of your pet and prepare three questions or messages to your pet. The animal communicator does not need to meet your pet in person, he could connect with your pet and convey your messages telepathically by looking at the photograph.

Is there any course for studying animal communication and telepathy? The Institute of Scientific Animal Communication (ISAC) conducts courses for training accredited animal communicators. Anyone can be an accredited animal communicator after finishing the courses with at least two years training.

Some people found that animal communication can really help them with the relationship with their pets. In the meantime, some people think animal communication is weird and dubious. Years ago, there was a TV programme about animal communication and telepathy. Some animal communicators were invited to connect with a 'pet' which was actually a plastic tortoise. Different animal communicators claimed that they received different messages from the 'pet'. At the end of the TV programme, those animal communicators were told that the 'pet' was actually a plastic toy. They couldn't explain why they could receive the messages from it.
